

HNRS3560 : Being Human: Theological and Psychological Reflections

This course will examine what it means to be human from both a theological and a psychological perspective. This is obviously an interdisciplinary approach to the topic, one that will reap rich benefit for the student. It will show that we are integrated persons and should be considered holistically, not as spiritual beings in opposition to our psychological and social characteristics. Additionally, this course will examine being human from the perspective of spiritual formation.

Credits 3

Prerequisites

Acceptance into the Honors College