

PHYS3500 : Statistical Analysis for Physics and Engineering

This course covers the topic and applications of statistics to physics and engineering. Probability, discrete random variables and probability distributions, continuous random variables and random sampling and data description, point estimation of parameters, statistical intervals for a single sample, and tests of hypotheses for a single sample. Experimental Data Analysis.

Credits 3

Prerequisite Courses

MATH2520